this program

“This program has provided valuable insight into both my own leadership approach and the behaviours of those around me, particularly through understanding the connection between brain psychology, emotions and how people respond in the moment; and I would highly recommend it as a worthwhile opportunity to better understand where you are at as a leader.”

Rachael Dimmack, Administration Coordinator
– Municipal Operations, Indigo Shire Council

“The Foundation of People Leadership program has given me invaluable skills in self-awareness that will positively shape how I show up as a leader, co-worker, family member, and friend.

It’s helped me better understand myself, my communication, and the impact I have on those around me.”

Our Facilitators

James

Jensen

Born in regional Victoria, James' path to leadership began in the high-stakes world of military special operations. At 19, James was accepted into the Australian Army, and soon after, into the country's most elite unit - the Special Air Service Regiment (SASR). Over 20 years, James led teams in complex, high-pressure missions across the globe, where clarity, trust, and decision-making under extreme conditions weren't optional, they were survival.

After leaving the military, James turned his focus to a new challenge: helping others lead with the same level of intention, discipline, and humility. With a philosophy built on experience, James' programs guide leaders to test, refine and live their leadership daily. He believes the best leadership development happens over time - through reflection, experimentation, and the willingness to try again.
